THE correspondent of the Hour in his last lette gives an interesting but depressing picture of the agricultural condition of Italy. Over 29,000,00 agree of the fairest land in that once famous agricultural region lay waste and almost sterile for want of cultivation. The Italian land-owners, the vast majority of whom are nobles, utterly neglect their aucestral domains. They spend fabulous sums upon costly furniture, town palaces, rare antiques, beautiful pictures and statuary, but not one exertion quadruple their incomes. The Italian peasant is not lazy, but he suffer both from the with which his grandfather tilled the soil. His lord will not hear of modern improvements either in machinery or methods of sgriculture. Some are even proud of their waste land and will neither lease nor sell. There is hardly an Hallan peasant lease nor sell. There is hardly an Hallan possent who knows of America but envise its freedom. Its richness and its educational liberty. Able bodied, willing men are wandering throughout the country houseless, fandless and almost starving. Could the idle peasantry be employed I tally would in five years export wheat rather than buy it. A new ora is vaguely shadowed forth by the efforts of a few threat laters in the entire of a other locality. The trouble with the demo-crats is that their leaders lost their by the democratic party the result will be on cultivated lands and the compelling of the waste land and preserves beyond a certain pre-scribed acreage about each domain to be thou oughly used, either as vineyards or grain and among the agricultural countries of the world.
